The Exmoor Society is concerned about young people moving away from the moor in search of employment. The Pinnacle Award acts as a catalyst to unlock enterprise in young people by providing seed corn money for them to develop a rural business opportunity that may enable them to stay in the area. Some past winners are shown above and below.

This is an annual Award of £3,000 available to individuals or groups aged between 18 and 27 who live, work or study in the Greater Exmoor area.

Finalists will be judged on the originality and sustainability of their ideas and the ability to present them to the panel of judges. Neither academic achievement, nor completed projects are looked for, but the panel want to see well-presented ideas that can make money, keep people on Exmoor and provide local employment. Business areas can include agriculture, forestry, conservation, horticulture, crafts, traditional skills and tourism.

Applications are now invited for the 2019 Award, with a closing date of 30th June.
